Extensive Road Work Is Planned All Over State

SALISBURY, June 3.—Seventy per cent of the funds available for county road work must be allotted to district supervisors for expenditure under the present system, according to a circular letter forwarded by the sub-committee on legislation of the last convention of county judges and commissioners to all county judges and commissioners in the state, asking them for their views on needed legislation.

The letters are being forwarded by State Engineer Lewis, a member of the committee, and make inquiries on all road problems in which the committee is in need of enlightenment from the county courts.

"It appears that something over $6,000,000 is being expended annually on roads in Oregon," says the committee. "This work is largely under the direction of the county courts. Seventy per cent of the funds available for county work must be allotted to district supervisors for expenditure. In some counties there appear to be sixty or more heads to road work and as many different systems are followed. Good results are doubtless had in some cases. In others, funds are wasted. There being no clear cut division of responsibility, county courts are often blamed for the inefficiency of the supervisors. Without centralized control, no uniform system of maps, profiles or cost keeping records can be kept so as to show where and how this vast sum of money is expended. The sub-committee favors the Iowa plan of having the main trunk roads specifically designated as state roads, to be built and maintained at the expense of the state."

"DRUGGED WATERS"

Clarence Webb, manager of the High Bluff Mineral Springs, has long doped the spring with lithia, sulphur, etc., in order to attract wealthy patients who imagine they have ailments. Cornelia is aware of the drugging of the spring but she considers the end justifies the means, as the business provides a nice income for her niece, Gladys, who would have nothing without it. Gladys has lately returned from college and knows nothing of the methods used to obtain business. She knows her father wishes her to marry Clarence, but she has given the matter no thought, as she is sorrowful over her father's death. A retired capitalist, Mr. Hartermed to keep them there and give his plan a trial, knows the only way to do so is to quarantine them. He has Clarence, who is about to leave town, locked up in an old ice house, and tells the guests Clarence has smallpox, and that they are quarantined. He stations guards outside the doors and windows, and no one is allowed to leave the house. Many laughable difficulties with his eccentric patients present themselves to Dr. Sherwood, but the final catastrophe occurs when Selma, who is jealous of Dr. Sherwood, learns that Clarence hasn't the smallpox. She bribes one of the guards to send for the health officer and they release Clar-

ron, and his daughter, Selma, who is once, who at once tells the guests of the false quarantine. The guests have become much benighted by Dr. Sherwood's treatment. They all rally to support Dr. Sherwood. As the doctor could prove that Clarence defrauded the public for years, no one is arrested but poor Weary, the tramp, who, without clothes or food, has been locked in the house, and has been dodging every one until finally caught. He tells the constable, disgustedly, "you couldn't find anyone else to arrest so you arrested me." The path of true love appears smooth to Gladys and Dr. Sherwood, as the business seems an assured success. At the Orpheus Thursday and Friday.

Moving Pictures

As some people prefer a program of good single or double reel subjects to the longer productions, Mr. Houston has arranged for a program of this kind for the Star, which is sure to please, and which will be shown each

Thursday night. Tonight, the second episode of "The Mysteries of Myra," the spirit drama which is going so big in all the larger cities, will be shown; also a good Frank Daniels comedy, "Jack Hires a Stenographer"; a Pathe comedy by Lonesome Luke, "The Convict King," a three reel Lubin drama and a Selig one reel drama, makes a seven reel program that is sure a winner.

If you are contemplating building a house, barn or garage, do not fail to investigate our Plan Book System. Complete set of specifications and working drawings furnished free with each material bill.—BIG BASIN LUMBER COMPANY, Klamath Falls, Ore. Phone 107. 5-6t
